Community Colleges Implement Programs For Senior Citizens

Every day 1,000 Americans turn 65 years of age.

Because of the Virginia Community College System's commitment to lifelong learning, its 23 colleges are focusing increased attention on the educational concerns of the State's senior citizens.

"We have been implementing programs tailored to the needs and interests of senior citizens for a number of years," explained Dr. Dana B. Hamel, Chancellor of the Community College System, "but with the passage of the Senior Citizens Higher Education program by the 1974 General Assembly we have the opportunity to intensify our efforts."

The Senior Citizens Higher Education program, effective July 1, waives tuition and other required fees at state-supported colleges and universities for Virginia residents 65 years of age and older.

Under this bill, senior citizens may register for credit courses and pay no tuition if their taxable income for the previous year did not exceed $5,000. Regardless of income, the bill allows senior citizens to audit credit courses or enroll in regular courses on a space-available basis for a three quarter or semester -- without paying regular fees.

The bill provides that senior citizens are to be accepted in a program after all full-time and part-time students paying regular tuition fees have been accomodated.

Virginia Western Community College, Roanoke, and Thomas Nelson Community College, Hampton, exemplify the Community College System's concern for the educational needs of senior citizens.

Virginia Western, which served approximately 2,600 senior citizens during the past year, has continued its weekly on-campus program which covers a variety of topics. Speakers have included bankers and lawyers, representatives from the Social Security Administration and Federal Drug Administration, among others.

The college, with a $22,000 federal grant is conducting classes, seminars and workshops in gerontology for paraprofessionals and professionals.

Thomas Nelson is a member of the Peninsula Federation of Senior Citizens Organizations and the Southeast Virginia Consortia for Senior Citizens programs in gerontology. One of the college's more recent programs was a senior Citizen; Drugs - Name Brands versus Generic Names; Legal - Aid Assistance; and What You Should Know About Wills and Trusts.

For more information on the offerings for senior citizens, interested persons should contact the Director of Continuing Education at the college in their region.
